5. Risk factors such as market risk, liquidity risk, portfolio entities/ companies' risk, etc.

Any investment pursuant to the advisory services offered by JBIAPL are subject to various risks, each of which can affect the value, returns, and liquidity of the investment portfolios of the Investors. Set out below is an indicative list of the risk categories:

1. Advisory Strategy Risk

The performance of the investment strategy is fundamentally dependent on the performance and investments of the underlying funds and in turn the business results, financial health, and sustainability of the underlying entities or companies. Poor governance, unexpected financial downturns, sector-specific challenges or macro factors can directly impact returns. JBIAPL will regularly review the models and communicate to the Clients of any changes made.

2. Valuation Risk

There is a risk that the assets or companies within the portfolio may be incorrectly valued, leading to missed opportunities. Regular review and reassessment of valuation metrics are crucial for addressing this risk. To mitigate this risk, JBIAPL or any other authorised service providers of JBIAPL would put in mechanism to reconcile the valuations.

3. Market Risk

Overall market volatility—including changes in prices, trading volumes, interest rates, and currency exchange rates—can influence the performance of the portfolio. Broader economic or political events may also have a significant effect on the markets. JBIAPL will monitor the Financial Products on which it advises, on a regular basis to understand the market risk parameters better and their impact on the portfolio models and investments of the Investors.

4. Liquidity Risk

Certain equities, fixed income and other assets may be difficult to buy or sell quickly without any impact on their price, especially during volatile market periods. This can limit JBIAPL's ability to react to market changes or rebalance model portfolios efficiently. JBIAPL will monitor the Financial Products advised on a regular basis to understand the liquid risk parameters that may affect the models and investments in a better manner.

5. Third Party Service Provider/Third Party Risk

Dependence on external service providers, such as transfer agents, data vendors or account aggregators, carries risks related to the operational reliability, technology security, and regulatory compliance. Failures or breaches in providing any services can also lead to disruptions or losses and may lead to unauthorized and fraudulent transactions. JBIAPL would perform sufficient due diligence on the third-party service providers and have agreements incorporating the required indemnity / penalty clauses.

6. Digital Application Risk

Risks associated with the use of digital platforms, applications, and online tools (including artificial intelligence tools), including potential cyberattacks, data breaches, unauthorised access, software vulnerabilities, and downtime. These can affect the operational integrity and client confidentiality. JBIAPL would perform adequate testing and put in place mechanisms for business continuity plans.
